

Figure 4: Ancestral character state reconstructions tracking values for duration (a) and rate of tail vibration (b) across the phylogeny. High values appear to be concentrated in the rattlesnake clade for duration of vibration, while a more gradual transition is observed between rattlesnakes and other species for rate of vibration.